Course Work for Ph. D. English Students

Pre-Ph.D Course Work in English

Every student admitted to the Ph.D. programme in English will be required to pass a course work of minimum 21 credits. The 21 credit course has been divided into three categories. Courses in category-A (9 credits) are core courses compulsory for all students. Category-B (6 credits) courses are discipline-specific courses, while Category-C (6 credits) includes research theme specific courses.

Discipline-specific courses are those broad approaches or areas of research which are generally used in a particular discipline. These are overarching research paradigms which are applied to researches in Humanities and Languages and include issues, ideas and knowledges used as reference points by researchers in a particular discipline.~

Research theme-specific courses relate to the specific, focused areas of research and aim at sensitizing the researcher to the specific requirements of possible research problems and topics. However, discipline-specific and theme-specific courses complement each other and cannot be seen in isolation. It may include topics from other disciplines as well.

Pre-Ph.D. Course Work Outcomes:

1. To train the researchers to identify research problem and to cultivate analytical and critical perspective in the research.
2. To introduce the researchers to the ethics of research.
3. To train the researchers in the writing of research articles and thesis.
4. To introduce researchers to the various approaches to literary and cultural texts.
5. To sensitise researchers to the emerging areas and trends in research.
6. To equip the researchers with the basic computer and IT skills, and accessing of e-journals and e-books.
7. To introduce the researchers to the tools, methods and methodologies of research.
